MR. OLIVERA ON TAXATION.

[Conclusion from yesterday.] We will now try to explain the France and England.

You will have observed that speak ing of the United States, we mentioned that this country would not serve as an example of abnormal in stitutions such as we wished to quote as illustrations.

With regard to France and England we have followed the same rule; we have examined the budget of ordinary times, and not of those years in which a state of war naturally increased the expenditure. You have thus seen state of a country in the same manner France in 1854 employ all her re- as the pulse gives the medical practisources in the colossal war of the Crimea, subsequently in her war in of the patient, and is of the same use. We trust that these explanations will have shown that the numbers we have given are not the result of " mere vaunt or casual mis-statements," but, on the contrary, are the result of assiduous investigations, in order to arrive at the truth, and, by comparing the ordinary disbursements of two of the greatest nations in the world, dedifference of opinion that appears to monstrate the absurdity of our present exist between us in regard to the an- position, and the absolute necessity nual taxes paid by each individual in of retrenchment, by causing the extraordinary war expenses of the nation to cease, and by curtailing the heavy items of the provincial budget in the sustainment of a capital, and a long list of public employés which the country districts have to pay for, and can no longer support without complete
