When we add, on the authority of our Gazetteer, "that the lowlands about the Delta of the Orinoce reek with pestilential exhalations", "that elephantiasis and goitre seem to be here endemic diseases", and that fevers and dysentery are rather the rule than the exception, it will be evident that no sattler, unless endowed with the proverbial cheerfulness of Mr. Mark Tapley, ought ever to entertain the notion of colonizing those swampy shores.

But what are Englishmen but a nation of Mark Tapleys? Here is "the Chartered American, English, and Venezuelau Trading and Commercial Company," which has been able to persuade a band of British emigrants to find their way to an unbealthy locality on the Caura River, where for land "wholly unimproved, not a tree having been cut or a swamp drained or a hut built on it," the Company had demanded and obtained from the emigrants £4 for lots of ten acres. The story of these emigrants is briefly this:-Under the leadership of Mr. Bond, lately Captain in Her Majesty's 91st Highlanders, they left Europe in October, and arrived at Cindad Bolivar in November. A SCREW LOOSE.

To clean a 'vasura' box, to pave a street, to punish crime, or to keep back the Indians is, we fear, above our abilities as a people and a nation. To many it may seem ridiculous to descend to such trifles as the emptying of a 'vasura' box, but it is the pawn in chess that wins the game, and the insignificant 'vasura' box teaches us the most significant of lessons. That miserable vehicle of filth that stands all day long in the streets, an eye sore and a nuisance on the kerbstone, points to the loose screw. If such trifles defeat to succeed? Search the world round, and such a miserably, wretchedly paved town as Buenos Ayres cannot be found hitherto; we spent millions yearly in a botchery unworthy of the name of pavement; the bankrupt state of the Municipality has we are happy to say put a stop to this, and last week all the paviors in the town were discharged, owing to the sheer inability of the Corporation to pay them. Crime is never punished in this country as it ought. With much truth the if such conduct on the part of the judges is allowed to pass, there will be no punishment at all for minor offences. The last advices from the South bring the most sickening details respecting the late Indian invasion; in yesterday'¤ issue we gave the fullest particulars of this heartrending tale: the savage has us a lesson, which had we sense, we could have gathered from the dull 'vasura' box. Yes there is a screw loose. It is not with the judge in his court, or the Indian on the frontier, or the vasura' man with his broken down eart, but it is with the people of Buenos Ayres who treat everything with

But law than their own savage instincts. this is not patience; it is the same I speak of Lopez, and of Sanchez, his the executioners left the main road to the nation, which allows the judges to give-liberty to the vile assassin and murderer, and which sees the whole country swept bare by the savage Incannot exculpate the people. In fact there is no people, no public in this country at all. The Argentine Republic is a nation of individuals, every man for himself and the d--l and the 'vasura'-man for us all. There is no cohesion; it is easier to make a loau in England than to convene a public meeting in the Plaza Victoria. Ninetenths of the people of Buenos Ayres functions of curate, episcopal delegate, would rather pay a fine of a hundred and visitor of the vast ecclesiastical dollars a man than attend a meeting to-morrow, to pass a vote of censure on the Criminal Judge of San Nicolas. The people of Buenos Ayres are up in everything save their rights; they can make money and spend it; they can read newspapers and even write for them, support editors and abuse them, call out armies and defeat a foreign foe; but the Indian on their frontiers, the judge on his bench, the vasura-man ou his box, or the assassin in their midst, derides their power and mocks tbeir authority. Polished manners, a fine advery good in their way, but the stern virtues of a republican citizen are missing; far better for the country that in our manners we were more nnconth, and in our customs less polished. Crime would not then go so unpunished, nor life and property so unprotected. The brawny arm of the sturdy republican would be ready at a moment's warning to stand by his tellow citizen in the hour of need. As at present situated, the Argentine citizen is the most helpless of individuals; the Indians may sweep into his sults and my sacerdotal office treated estancia and carry off his property, with the greatest, possible disregard whilst the owner with his wife and and ignominy, being even deprived of family are huddled at the bottom of a my habit, I arrived at Asuncion, well, parleying for life with the snakes the capital of Paraguay, where I found below or the caciques above; or worse one of my companious, the Rev. But I must confess the truth of my im pressions, that although a new face has been put to the building now overlooking the patio, in spite, or many pupils being in the school-room of an art department where sketchingand statuary models are going on, even a room for the study of physics with electric batteries and other mechanical appliances, the place seems to me to give very faint hopes of its having the faculty to create a Phonix in the nineteenth century. For the whole thing lacks vitality

In the opposite square to the private entrance of the Jesuit's chapel is the orphans school, founded as I learn from Dr. Vilalba, the existing Minister of the Provincial Government, in April A.D. 1782, when one of the Carmelite order the Right Rev. Dr. Dn. José Antonio de San Alberto was Bishop of Cordova.

The inside of this building, sthough very spacious, as having several 'patios,' or court-yards, is very gloomy. The 'patios' are crowded with orange trees and a number of flower plants, that appear as if they felt the influence of prison air, and were bound to droop accordingly. The Carmelite nuns who __care it are likewise very poor and in much need of contributions from the charitable world. In the chapel here, which partakes of the general sombre aspect, is a portrait of the founder before mentioned, , and at the right hand corner of the painting is an inscription like that on the founder of the University, wherefrom we learn that San Alberto was a barefooted Carmelite friar-that be was Procurador General of all the order in Madrid, and Chaplain to the King of Spain, Carlos III, who presented him to the Holy Church of from Montevideo announces the capture of the Cordoba on the 25th of May, 1778. He wwn of Melo by the rebel troops, and the steady ras consecrated in Buenos Ayres by Sr. Malbar, and took possession of the diocese, entering the city, on the 30th of October, 1780. He was promoted to the Archbishopric of Charcas, and, although declining to accept it, his resignation was not taken, and so he set out for his new service on the 29th of April, 1785, after having adorned this holy church and founded the House of Orphans.
