

your friends are always glad to see it, said one of her listeners. The Colon Theatre was packed on Sunday night to witness the second performance of L'Académie. It was a performance of the masculine character to look at boxes or 'Cazuela' lost a fatal beauty and fashion-trick should result. The performance was good in every respect, the large audience stimulating the artists to exertion.

Several of our German friends who have been to see the Wax Works at the Coliseum have remarked to us that the only fault they find is that the Emperor William is represented as quite too low in stature, and even smaller than his conquered rival the Emperor Napoleon III, also that, here and there, there is a slight discrepancy in the uniforms. We have seen the show declare it all who have seen the display and like it to be most interesting and life-like. The 'observed of all observers' is the effigy of His Imperial Highness the Crown Prince of Germany; the girls say he must be 'a duck of a man' and the boys a 'beau sabreur'.

The French Theatre was crowded to the doors on Saturday night on the occasion of Madame Philippe's benefit. On Sunday the company made its last appearance and now goes to Montevideo. We hear with the greatest regret that our estimable colleague Dr. Carfillo, of the Verdad, continues in a very precarious state of health. We publish to-day another Essay on the Influence of Climate. In reference to the next, we have to request competitors not to back their copy, in other words only to write on one side of each sheet of paper. Printers and editors are a meek and forgiving class, and always remember the injunction to 'calculate you;' but, like Nelson, who said to his invincible rats, 'I love your enemies, my boys, but hate the Frenchmen,' composers have to hate those who 'back' their copy. Press copy must not be like a lady's letter—all crossed and the pith in the postscript.

It is gratifying to learn that Marshal Bazaine has a chance of escaping being sacrificed to the popular outcry against him, at least he seems easy enough on the subject himself. A correspondent, writing from Paris, says: "Justice in France may be sure, but certainly it is unmercifully slow. I called upon Marshal Bazaine this morning at the house on the Avenue de Picardie which has been hired by the Government to serve as his place of confinement. The Marshal seemed of good health and cheerful spirits. But, although he has been now upwards of six weeks a prisoner, he has not yet been informed what are the specific charges against him. 'If I am to be tried,' he said, 'for capitulating at Metz, my defence is easy enough. We had nothing to eat. If we had had provisions we should have been there yet. But if political matters are mixed up with the accusations against me—if I am to be tried because I did not jump with joy and cry 'Vive la République' when I heard the news of the 4th September, then, my defence is not so easy. He evidently feels his position deeply, and is much annoyed and grieved at being so uselessly kept a prisoner week after week, only allowed to see his wife and children for a few hours every day. But he has wonderful pluck, and does not show how much all this torments him. The latest papers from the States announce a fearful increase in wife beating and whisky drinking in California. A San Francisco paper makes the following remarks on the latter subject: 'The Sheriff of Salono County reports to the Prison Commission that three-fourths of the crime committed in that vicinity results from the use of whisky. Having discovered the cause of the disease, it is easy to apply the remedy. Remove the taxation from brandy, so as to bring it within the means of all.' A few evenings since, Mr. Lovett, a temperance fanatic, used the Hall of Young Christianity to emit a prolonged wail over 'The Curse of Wine.' The curse of wine may be all his fancy points it, but it is a social blemish compared with the Curse of Whine.' A serious accident occurred at the Retiro station of the Northern Railway on Sunday morning. As the 9:45 train was starting a boy made an attempt to jump on the platform, fell on the rails, and had one of his legs so badly mutilated that it had to be amputated in the evening. Not the slightest blame is attached to any of the Company's servants, the accident being wholly due to the boy's own foolishness. We trust his fate will be a warning to youngsters, and 'oldsters' also.

Our contemporary the Unión del Sud of Chascomus justly holds up as a model settlement the little English Colony on the Saeco Grande. For eight years over forty Englishmen have been settling there, and the world forgetting and by the world forgot, tending sheep and tilling the soil. They are all armed with the best rifles and are the terror of the Indians, who they often attack in their hordes. In those eight years the colony had only two men killed by the Indians. The leader of this gallant band is known for his daring exploits for leagues round the South, and has been named 'Facon Grande.' The same paper calls attention to the wonderful increase of movement and general progress on the Salado since the Southern Railway has a station there. The Devil has at last appeared at Montevideo. His Satanic Majesty has only assumed the form of a newspaper after all. Madame Cepeda now sings the dear old 'Guards,' by Godfrey, after the operas, at the Solis Theatre in Montevideo. It takes prodigiously, we understand. We had a letter yesterday from Rio from our old friend and confidant Mr. G.P. Crautrud, whose large circle of friends in this city will be glad to learn that he purposes returning here about the end of next month. He informs us that there is no doubt whatever as to General Mitre's mission ending amicably and successfully. The General had been laid up for three or four days and nothing had transpired regarding the progress of the negotiations. An intense feeling of dissatisfaction and disapproval has been excited amongst the foreign community in Rio by a report on Emigration to Brazil by Mr. Phipps, who it will be remembered, was attached for a short time last year to H.M. Legation in this city. The Report is written in a very off-hand style, and is said to give an unfair account of the subject matter on which it treats. The worst is that from his official character he is likely to do a deal of harm in England, and interfere with the flow of emigration that is beginning to be established. In the opinion of those Britishers in Brazil most competent to judge, that Empire, particularly the southern part, offers a most desirable field for European emigration. The Government certainly has not, with all its good intentions, dealt with the subject as wisely and successfully as it ought; still, it is felt that this is no justification for Mr. Phipps's one-sided report, which points only to the defects, and has not a single good word for all that can with justice be said in favor of the subject. The report in question has been unequivocally condemned for its misstatements and for its incompetent criticisms and foreign bias, competent to judge of the matter. English society at Rio is on the 'qui vive' for a great matrimonial event on the 14th inst., on which day Mr. Dundas, British Consul at Santos, and formerly secretary to Mr. Buckley Mathew when in Buenos Ayres, will lead to the Hymeneal altar Miss Scully, the lovely and accomplished daughter of our esteemed colleague the editor of the Anglo-Brazilian Times. A splendid 'facion' is announced for next Saturday evening at the Opera House, in aid of the Poor Man's Hospital. Marta will be performed, and Madame d'Hervil, the great pianiste, will play and sing. Lelmi is himself again, and Robert le Diable will be given to-morrow night; at the Opera House to-night Semiramide will be given. Great musical times these!

When one sits down to write on the above subject he is struck with its vastness, and is oppressed with the idea that in a short essay not a shadowy outline of the varied changes it produces even on the material world can be portrayed. A man who leaves the far North, with its rugged and barren mountains capped with eternal snows, its frozen, desolate and silent plains, and after a few weeks' travel finds himself in tropical regions, where the year round appears one perpetual summer, he wanders over green, smiling plains, in vast forests of noble trees, amongst the most luxuriant vegetation, the scene terminates on a scene of birds, which his sight is dazzled with the innumerable and vivid hues of insects, and of flowers that meet his eyes at every step. He may muse and study over it, but the solution of the wonderful transformation is—a difference in the climate. And this difference, so great and palpable in nature, is none the less so, though perhaps less apparent and more subtle, on man; and in the few remarks I offer I shall confine my attention to its influence on him. To me this influence appears solely physical; all know that the body acts on the mind and vice versa, and it is true that the minds of races differ greatly, and may not do look at the same object from very widely different points of view; but if the matter is traced to its source the primary influence to give those views will be found to have acted on the physical man. Intellect appears, perhaps with one or two exceptions, to be pretty well equally distributed to men over the whole globe, more apparent and active in some races than others, on account of their acquiring knowledge and cultivating the mind. Looking at a man as a mere machine, to get out of him the maximum amount of labour, both of mind and body, it is, I think, a fact beyond dispute that he thrives best in what we call a temperate climate, and if it inclines a little more to the frigid than to the torrid, you, physically speaking, get him at his best. For instance, the Prussians, the mountaineers of Switzerland and Scotland. These hardy robust northerners have naturally hard robust keen minds to match, which generates a short brusque manner in his intercourse with his fellow men. This on the surface contrasts very unfavourably with the easy and courteous address of southern nations. Contrast the bustling New Yorker hurrying down Broadway to his business, as if his life depended upon his speed, some bright frosty winter morning, with the dignified and polite Spanish Don conducting his business in some sunny plaza in a city of Southern Spain; or the hundreds of busy Londoners struggling along with the refractory umbrellas against the wind and pelting rain, each jostling his neighbour with his mind bent only on reaching by the shortest cut on some Asiatic mart where the merchant meets his brother merchant with a deep salutation, and appoints next day, when after their coffee and pipe, they calmly discuss their little business, but all this, as I before remarked, is merely on the surface. Every cultivated and gentlemanly man is polite, of whatever clime, only the influences of that climate cause him to display the virtues in a widely different manner. To illustrate my meaning I take the case of a New York, Paris, and Pekin, and each individual will wonder at the others' breeding, and speculate as to where he has been brought up. Northerners often think and say that Southern nations show a slothful and indolent temperament; nothing can be more unjust, as this want of energy is merely the influence of the hot climate, and it will be found that the grand children, and future generations of the northerner who settles in milder regions will gradually and imperceptibly merge into the habits of body and mind that distinguish that particular people among which their lot is cast; and this argument equally applies to the generations of the southerner transplanted to a more northern clime; such is the effect of different temperature on the human frame. One popular fallacy, it seems to me in reference to climate's influence, is that a large quantity of rain is detrimental to the species, and Englishmen are considered at times dull and heavy from the infliction of too much wet and fog, but I have not found it so; 'autumnal,' the British, in their quiet way, can be as jovial, and appreciate the enjoyments of life, equally with all other nations, but if that is not conclusive travel a little further and land on the shores of 'Green Erin,' where for eight months out of the twelve it rains every other day, but yet Pat is proverbial for elasticity of spirits and sparkling wit; the more it rains the more he sings and whistles as he travels about in the wet or takes a peep through his cabin window at the sea, and can be seen pouring down off the thatched roof, and you see Biddy's merry shining face peering at you through
