DEATH OF NAPOLEON III.

Life is now-a-days too long for fame. Such is the unerring mutability of human affairs that, to dazzle posterity, great men who have secured the world's esteem should die early.

The following short biographical sketch of this remarkable man is of itself a homily. 'Tis all that we can at the moment afford; but editors are not the only persons to chaffer out to the Christian mind the deep lesson that Napoleon's life teaches.

The fall of Napoleon taught the world humility. The death of Napoleon instils charity. There is nothing left to us in life, if in the career of the dead Emperor we find not a single teaching of Divine Providence.

Louis Napoleon was baptized November, 1810, by Cardinal Pasch, his great uncle; the Emperor and his new Empress Ma in Louisa, standing sponsors. After the final overthrow of the fortunes of the first Napoleon, at Waterloo, all the kings and queens of his race or favour, with the sole exception of Bernadotte, King of Sweden, who had proved false to him, were removed from their thrones.

The military education of the Prince was not neglected, for he became a good fencer and rifleman, and an admirable horseman. At the garrison of Constance he received his first lessons in practical drill; and having joined the camp at Thurr, canton of Berne, he became proficient in artillery practice, under General Dufour, a veteran of the Empire.

He met his brother at Florence, and both together fought against the Papal troops until hope was gone. His brother died at Forli, and he himself fell ill of fever at Ancona. Hunted at every turn, he contrived, amid many dangers, to make his way to England—the harbour of safety for all political refugees.

He gained over a number of adherents to this daring and reckless plan, everything seemed favourable, but an unlucky accident; a division in his followers, one part marching in one direction, and the other part another, caused the scheme to miscarry, and the Prince was made prisoner.

There is nothing left to us in life, if in the career of the dead Emperor we find not a single teaching of Divine Providence. Money, wealth, trade, commerce—pshaw! the screw in the coffin defeats all. The Gaul or the Teuton, the Celt or the Saxon, are all shut off by that screw.

and the popularity gained for the Emperor in England grew less and less fervent, and threatened to be entirely extinguished, if not replaced by animosity or jealousy. This growing ill-feeling was strengthened in 1857-8, by the injudicious demand made upon the British Government, by that of the French Emperor, to alter the laws affecting political and other exiles in England, to meet the case of the persons supposed to be implicated in the cowardly attempt at assassination, with which the name of Orsini is so infamously associated.

Europe was startled on the 1st of January, 1859, by a declaration of the Emperor of the French to the Austrian ambassador at Paris, expressive of his great regret that the relations between the two countries were no longer satisfactory.

He marched from victory to victory, gained laurels at the hard fought field of Magenta, and finally defeated the whole Austrian army at the great and decisive battle of Solferino.

The Emperor of the French thus proved himself as great in war as in domestic administration; he had wrested Lombardy, with its beautiful capital of Milan, from the grasp of Austria, and done enough for his future fame as well as for his present purpose.

Government, a treaty of commerce between France and Great Britain was drawn up, of which the principle was triumphantly affirmed in the British House of Commons; and the Emperor regained that popularity in England which he enjoyed in the early stages of the Crimean war.
