The winter is setting in with seven league boots, and the usual prognostics, drawn from the flight of crows, wild-ducks, swallows, and other feathered friends and enemies.

On the principle of our grapes, we are glad to learn the Duke of Brunswick's diamonds have been found so little valuable in comparison with their reputed worth.

It has been said that the best of all ways to lengthen our days, is to steal a few hours from the night.

GREAT SALE OF SHORTHORNS. (From a New York paper.) Further particulars have come to hand of the great sale of the entire herd of purebred shorthorns.

The auctioneer was a Mr. Page, whose smartness was exceedingly characteristic of our Transatlantic cousins, and frequently struck with astonishment the Englishmen in attendance.

Those of our countrymen present frequently felt embarrassed by this extraordinary expertise, with an additional element of confusion was caused by the prices being calculated in dollars instead of pounds sterling.
