THE WAR IN THE NORTH.

DESPATCHES FROM SINBAD.

THE THREE LAST BATTLES.

Corrientes, July 27.

Gentlemen,

The week-past has been an eventful one at Yatayty. Besides divers skirmishes there has been a battle of three days duration at the allied encampment, upon the same spot where the combat took place on the 24th of May. The number of slain and wounded now may equal or perhaps surpass those of that date. There has been no statement made of the taking of prisoners—it is supposed that neither party chose to encumber themselves by doing so. Desperate charges were made by both sides; batteries were stormed, taken, retaken, or abandoned. By the last accounts the belligerents occupy nearly the same positions they held previous to the fight. Respecting the battle, here the wildest exaggerations have been published and believed. You may read of the bombardment and subsequent capture of Humaitá, of the abandonment of the Paraguayan encampment, of the enemy having fallen back upon Humaitá, and the allies in close pursuit expecting to enter the fortress mixed with the foes. What occurred was, as I have said, a bloody struggle: the hostile combatants contending for the ground by inches, in a hand-to-hand fight, which ended in a drawn battle. The news of the supposed victory was received here with the greatest enthusiasm, by the ringing of bells, firing of guns, rockets, and crackers, and was kept up day and night. Processions with flags and music paraded the town, giving defiance to 'vivas' and 'muera's; bonfires were seen in every street, and the ground was literally covered with burnt squibs. The denizens congregated at every corner congratulating each other.

It was customary in your city in the time of Rosas, when good news arrived, to set at liberty a number of "Salvajes Unitarios." Here a different method was proposed concerning those in duration for their Paraguayan proclivities, as to how they should be disposed of. Happily for those most interested in the matter, previous to the rejoicings an opportunity offered when the prisoners timely decamped. A few took refuge on board the Amazonas, others to the Chaco. When they were sought for all were 'non est.' Although we are scarcely 40 miles distant from the spot where the conflict took place, yet there are many versions of the affair. We will not add to the number. Enclosed goes a favor from the Commander of one of the Braz. transports. He was at the allied encampment when the fight was going on. You may depend upon his statements. All I will venture to say of the affair is, that since the 15th more or less firing was being heard at the north without ceasing until the 22nd (the heaviest part of which occurred on the 18th.) During this week many hundreds of the wounded have arrived here from the battle-ground, while more are yet to come. The hospitals in the city are full. Three of the principal churches and the theatre are being used as infirmaries. A large building of pine in course of erection is intended for a hospital. It is located in a densely peopled part of the city. The aggregate number of patients, including those at the battery and saladero, are above 10,000. I have looked in vain to find a Paraguayan among the maimed that were hurt in the last week. The army of Flores is reduced to two slender battalions, a mere zero in comparison to their numbers when they pitched their tents on the left margin of the Paso de la Patria. To their honor be it said, since the forcing of the Paraná they were always at the van, led on by men who knew no fear, or ever shrunk from danger, contending with a determined and wily foe, or what was still more to be dreaded, the pestilential exhalations from stagnant lagoons or estros, whose shores were covered with dead cattle in all stages of putrefaction. The Correntino army is also a shadow of what it was; the ranks thinned by slaughter, disease, and desertion. What else could be expected from impressed men? forced from their homes, in many cases bound hand and foot, and guarded to their quarters like so many veritable felons, where they are made to undergo every privation, without pay or clothing. Of the 600 troops that went (there was not a volunteer in their files) from the department of the Esquina, there are now 62 men rank and file; nine-tenths of the division deserted, they returned to their district by two's and three's, when they migrated at once to Entre Rios. In future the Argentines and Brazilians must depend upon their own actual resources. Notwithstanding the adverse vicissitudes of the allies, they still have the power to crush Lopez, who is straining every nerve before a junction takes place with Baron Porto Alegre. What the allies want, is a few thousand of sound horses, which ere long they will be supplied with.

The American Plenipotentiary is still here. The allied authorities have curtly denied him a pass to the Cabinet of Asuncion. Fortunately American citizens will suffer but little detriment by the detention. There is not a shilling's worth of American capital in the Republic of Paraguay! In the whole length and breadth of that State there are but two American citizens, both of whom are employed by His Excellency President Lopez, as inventors and makers of infernal machines, and other diabolical contrivances, wherewith to circumvent the allies. Only the other day a boat's crew was blown up; "sent to immortal smash" by means of their hellish ingenuity. Should the aforesaid citizens fall into the hands of the Brazilians low questions will be asked as to the country they owe allegiance to.

Here the political aspect of affairs is far from being satisfactory. Minister Carria has resigned in disgust. You may see in the journals published in this city, the personal abuse, the low vituperations that are being directed to the Governor, who gives little heed to the philippics.

It is said [which is probably the truth] he never reads newspapers. Any common man should be made of steel to withstand the evil censure and be silent. All those capable of bearing arms, and many who are not, have to pass their nights in the barracks, even those that hold situation under the Government have to be there. The post-office clerks allege the fact as an excuse for their inattentiveness. I was glad to see your indefatigable friend Captain Douglass in command of the Cisne. He is worthy of his charge, may good success attend him. Colonel Nelson and Captain Fitzmaurice of the engineers are here. They are both invalids; still they mean to start for Yatayty by the first opportunity.

July 27th p.m.—Gentlemen at noon I handed Captain Douglass a letter and papers for you: since, I have word that Porto Alegre is near the Paso de la Patria, that his cattle and baggage are at Tala Corá, three leagues distant from the Paso. In the meantime the English S. S. Brasil has left for Rio with 300 invalids and another steamer from above with wounded. The steamer General Flores with Flores and his suite have just left for Montevideo. The corpse of Palleja was taken on board with military honors, two battalions attended, one of Guardias Nacionales, the other Brazilians—the shore was covered with people. All deplored the loss of Palleja. A discourse was pronounced as the boat was about to leave. I could not get near enough to hear it. I was sorry for it: I forgot to tell you there has been no firing heard, or infernal machine explosions since Monday morning. The grounding of the Esmeralda has put me out: but for that, long since I would have been at my post.

Arrived, on the 14th, American steamer Julia, from Buenos Ayres, with hay, sailed for Itapiru, returned with wounded on the 19th, and sailed again for Itapiru.

Sailed Brazilian steamer Yguarey, with Ossorio on board, bound to Rio.

18th. Arrived Argentine steamer Portefa, from Buenos Ayres; brought no mail. Arrived Brazilian steamer Princesa with 140 wounded from Itapiru.

20th. Arrived Argentine steamer Argentina from Buenos Ayres with hay; no mail.

21st. Arrived English steamer Susan Beirne, from Paraná, with coal and a barque in tow.

22d. Arrived English steamer Brazil, from Itapiru, with 300 sick and wounded. To-day Colonel Aldecoa was interred with military honors in the Cemetery de la Cruz.

23d. Arrived American steamer Julia, from Itapiru, with 200 wounded Brazilians. She proceeded to the Saladero Hospital. Arrived Argentine steamer Pavon, with wounded Argentines, from Itapiru.

23rd. Arrived steamer Gen. Flores, from Buenos Ayres, with two 'patachos' in tow, bringing 250 horses. She touched and passed up to Itapiru.

24th. Arrived Brazilian steamer Princesa, from Itapiru, with wounded Brazilians discharged at Itapiru.

25th. Arrived steamer Cisne, from Buenos Ayres, with passengers. I boarded, most of them upon their arrival. Passed upwards steamer Cosmos, with horses, from Buenos Ayres.

26th. Arrived steamer Cosmos, from Itapiru. Arrived Oriental steamer General Flores, from Itapiru, with wounded.

The Princesa brought no news. She came with wounded, a battery and two guns (not 62, as was reported) which were spiked and afterwards abandoned: there was no precipitate flight to Humaitá. There is no truth in what is said of Curupaitu, or of the ditches, &c. There is no doubt that the enemy's loss is great. The battalion No. 12 contained 400 men; they were outflanked by an overwhelming force, and before protection could be given they were annihilated to a man, fighting desperately to the last; no quarter was asked or given: they were Voluntarios de la Patria. The captured flags have not arrived here as yet. It is true what is said of Mitre. The concluding note has not a word of truth. Among the slain is Col. Palleja: the brave soldier, the accomplished gentleman and scholar: I deplore his loss. The 'Standard' readers will miss him. I became acquainted with him at Ensenadas: ever after I was his welcome guest, sharing his hospitality without stint. His papers and plans (he was well versed in mathematics) were ever ready for my inspection. He was not as sanguine as were many of his brother officers that the conquest of Paraguay would not be difficult. After the 24th of May he seemed to have doubts as to the final issue of the war. Then he had a presentiment he would not outlive it, yet while he lived he meant to do his duty, that he would sooner perish than live to see his colors disgraced, saying—

"Before that day, by some brave hero's hand,
May I lie slain, and spurn the bloody sand."

He was struck down and instantly killed by a cannon shot while in the fury of charging at the head of his regiment a Paraguayan battery: his body was recovered and brought off. At the same time died Colonel Agüero, whose corpse it is said fell into the hands of the Paraguayans.

On the 16th the Pavon came in with wounded. She brought 180 Argentines. Soon after, the English steamer Brazil arrived from above with 300 more of the maimed Brazilians. In a little time after the Onco de Junio, with wounded, also came in. These three steamers brought troops that were hurt in skirmishes previous to the grand battles of the 16th, 17th, and 18th. Seven-eighths of those that came in the Pavon had contusions caused by the fragments of shells, grenades, or Congreve rockets as they exploded. I passed an hour with Dr. Pinedo (an old friend whom I have known since his boyhood) at the battery hospital. He was very assiduous in his attentions to the patients, who number 200. He as well as his associates understand their avocation. Here the Sisters of Mercy maintain their posts in defiance of the most loathsome and deadly form of infection, keeping watch at the sick beds, attending to every call of the wounded soldier with alacrity. They may be seen listening to his last accents, and closing his eyes with prayer: no duty is too onerous for them to perform. We have in the heart of the city six large pest-houses, whose inmates may be counted by thousands. Mortality is great not only there but also among the natives. The frequent transitions of the dead heaves and funeral processions through the streets, the large number of persons dressed in mourning, the frequent discharges of farewell shots, attest the sad fact. What else might be looked for in a city crowded to overflowing, where not the least attention is paid to cleanliness or garbage? Not long since a dead Guaycura was left to remain and fester in the open air, within a few yards of the principal landing-place, until it caused a horrid stench, when those living in the vicinity threw the corpse in the river. Filth of every description—both animal and vegetable matter—in all stages of decomposition, may be seen on all sides. Some of the patients in the hospitals get surgical and medical succour from a limited number of men, some of whom are no better qualified for their tasks than was the disciple of Dr. Sangredo (except those that have come from Buenos Ayres as also some of the Brazilians). Yet they make charges that Sir Astley Cooper and Dr. Hunter would have been astonished to have known the sum. The greatest quack has the highest price.

No news as yet (July 22d) from the convoy that went in quest of Baron Porto Alegre, other than that they had reached a point 47 leagues hence, and had commenced the embarkation.

SINBAD.

LETTER FROM AN EYE-WITNESS.
Corrientes, July 19th, 1866.
My dear Sir,—
You, like many others, take the 'shoddy bulletins' about great and glorious victories with a grain of salt;

past experience teaches us to do so. Now the other evening two steamers arrived at Corrientes with the national flags of the allies flying. Directly they have in sight there was a general excitement, and on anchoring nothing was heard save the great news accompanied by the ringing of crackers, bells, and the noise of fire-works; really, our imaginations ran riot under so much enthusiasm, nothing short of the conquest of Paraguay and Lopez prisoner could cause such 'sounds' of rejoicing. Next day things settled down and the more the actual state of things were investigated the worse they appeared for the allies. I have no time to go to the proof, but have made every enquiry and the result is simply that on the 13th the Brazilians took three Paraguayan batteries, which cost them very severely, the celebrated 12th battalion being entirely annihilated. On the 16th the Paraguayans retook one battery which, I am told, commands the others, and it is feared that the Brazilians will have to retire, falling back on their former position, their losses on the 16th being nearly as great as on the 13th, they also having lost some field pieces. An Argentine soldier told me this morning that the Paraguayan position is such that 50 men can hold it against 500.

The fighting on Tuesday was probably the severest of the campaign. I am told that the Brazilians were actually entrenched behind the dead bodies of their own men. Baron Porto Alegre's army is expected to-morrow, which reinforcement will raise the numerical strength of the allies up to what it was last week.

Yours truly, A. N.

NEWS FROM BRAZIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE PTOLEMY.

GREAT PREMIUM ON GOLD.

Through the kindness of a friend in Montevideo we have papers from Rio Janeiro to July 24th, per Liverpool steamer Ptolemy of the astronomical line, which brings no later dates from Europe. The death of General Sampaio caused profound regret in Brazil: he was of obscure origin, a native of Ceará, very ugly and taciturn, and brave as a lion. He began as a private soldier and rose step by step to the highest grade. He was the idol of his soldiers, and bore over a dozen wounds upon his body, but received his death-wound on May 24th.

The elections for Senator at Rio Janeiro in room of the late Baron de Uruguay will come off on August 26th, and Sr Octaviano is one of the candidates.

The money-market has suffered no great change during the week, but the European news must cause a decline in the rates of exchange. Some transactions were done at 24d., but last quotations are 22½d. In shares and stock we hear of nothing, except some Bank-of-Brazil shares at 1658. Discounts are unaltered. Little doing in specie. Sovereigns fluctuate from 11,200 to 11,700 reis, and the premium on gold is 15 or 14 per cent.

Dates from Rio Grande to July 18th. Baron Porto Alegre sent most of his army on to Paso la Patria, but ordered Portinho's division to remain behind at Itaimbé to observe a Paraguayan force at Itapua. The court-martial to try Gen. Cauavarro for cowardice is to meet shortly at Porto Alegre. The Jurupará arrived at Rio Grande on a secret mission, carrying two bronze cannon and some muskets taken from the Paraguayans on May 24th. Letters from Porto Alegre, July 15th, state that the Portinho division could not push on for Paso la Patria, having to keep in check the enemy's forces at Itapua and some of our friends in Corrientes. Col. Figuerstein, of this army has died. All the officers named to try Cauavarro have resigned, and the War-office will have to appoint a court composed of "boatswains from the navy." There are complaints of malversation in the commissariat, the Government paying $15 for preserved beef, while the same was offered at $5.

The steamer Arimo took up 270 Paraguayans from Rio Grande to Rio Janeiro: they were of the prisoners at Urugayana, and behaved themselves so well that the people of Rio Grande regret their departure: they pay from 4 to 6 hundred reis.

Twenty persons coming down a river near Goyaz were set upon by Chamboas Indians and murdered.

LETTER FROM LONDON.

[Our special correspondent.]

London, 23rd June, 1866.

Gentlemen,
During the past fortnight our financial prospects have somewhat improved, and as no further failures of any importance have occurred we are now anxiously awaiting a revival of confidence and return to a better state of things.

Enormous importations of gold from America have materially strengthened the Bank of England, and although the rate of Discount continues at the very high rate of 10%, it is considered almost certain to come down to 8% next week, when trade will doubtless recover from its present unhealthy state of absolute inactivity. The telegraphic advices from India are considered highly encouraging, showing that the suspension of the Agra and Masterman's Bank had produced comparatively little effect there, and that our previous forebodings as to the probable disastrous effects of this failure in India were much exaggerated, if not wholly unfounded.

The German war has now commenced in real earnest, and within a week Prussia has entirely overrun Hanover, Saxony, and Hesse Cassel, quietly annexing these territories without any resistance and almost without bloodshed. It seems incredible that Austria is not doing anything to check her enemy's audacious advances. It seems quite clear that Austria with her customary and inevitable unreadiness has been so far outwitted, and as it were bewildered, by Prussia's surprising promptitude and good generalship, and she must indeed bestir herself if she wishes to regain her lost time and efface the very injurious effect which the week's campaign has had upon the somewhat dubious loyalty and adhesion of the various minor German States to the Imperial cause.

Similar to the fate of the Ministry upon an unimportant clause of their Reform Bill, and as they have chosen to resign upon this question while the Queen is absent at Balmoral the nation is in a state of suspense for a few days as to whether the Cabinet will remain in office or give place to a Conservative Government. Until Her Majesty's return on Tuesday nothing can be decided, but the general impression is that she will not accept their resignation unless Lord Derby can count upon forming a strong Tory Cabinet, which seems very doubtful. The idea of a Dissolution of Parliament is not generally entertained, as it would do us no good but on the contrary be excessively inconvenient and distasteful to the country, especially at a time when foreign politics are in such a delicate and disturbed condition.

The marriage of the Princess Mary of Cambridge with Prince Teck took place on the 12th instant, and although comparatively private came off with great éclat. We are now anticipating the Princess Helena's wedding at Windsor early next month, which will doubtless be on a grand scale.

The London season continues as brilliant as ever, especially now that fine summer weather has set in, and the magnificent display of wealth, fashion and beauty in Rotten Row and the Drive if possible even outshines all their previous glories.

The details of the Paraguayan jungle fight were received here with great interest, and the liveliest satisfaction is felt at the various deeds of heroism recorded. Several newspapers have especially commented in their leading articles upon the results of the engagements between the ironclads and the forts—We anxiously await your further accounts.

Yours &c.

Hardly had he crossed the Uruguay and taken his post in the allied camp, when the public of Montevideo and Buenos Ayres were surprised by his first letter, which, without going into tedious details, was yet so precise and exact that it at once caused marked attention.
