

had before us melancholy proof of the contrary in the Gas Company. The direction of this society has, since its monopoly concluded, become more liberal. But we can well remember the time when every one who wished for gas was obliged to buy his gas lamp at the company's depot and at the company's price.

THE PROBABLE MONEY MARKET OF 1867.

The difference between the money market this year and last was described by a speculative person as "the difference between peace and war," so great was the excitement then and so complete the calm now. But this change is almost wholly confined to the business of enterprise—the optional business of the country, so to speak.

It is now so bad that it clogs up money in the hands of those who do not dream of themselves employing it. Lastly, in January, 1866, we were disposed to lend money to foreign nations; but now we are no longer so disposed. The finance companies, which at one time seemed likely to have a great effect as financial media between country and country, have now no effect at all. They bring out next to no enterprises to tempt capital abroad, and if they did, would tempt none thither.

BRAZILIAN ITEMS.

The elections have occupied so fully the attention of the people that there is little else interesting in the doings and sayings of the past fortnight. These primary elections commenced on last Sunday and have passed tolerably quietly, with the exception of a slight resort to physical force in two parish churches. So far as known the results seem in favor of the Conservatives.

great ease with which money is obtained at the banks and in the street upon anything at all like a security is the real cause of the buoyancy in the Bond market. The magic working of the Bank Exchange Office is the theme in every circle—nearly three millions of gold is now held in respect close to 75 millions paper money emitted, and yet, notwithstanding the great increase of paper in circulation, gold keeps still being changed for paper.
