with this burr that sheepfarming in that district was almost brought to a standstill.

Huerzo's splendid estancia was almost valueless for years owing to the impenetrable 'arbojo' fields.

but the industry and perseverance of an Irish sheepfarmer at last triumphed over the nuisance.

The weed when in flower was cut down, the camps cleared, and to-day some of the best Mestiza sheep in South America feed on that land.

but this was not accomplished without an effort and a very expensive one.

The value of the reclaimed land, however, more than repays for all this, and the neighbors for leagues around are benefited by the exertions of our countryman.

In the district of Carmen de Areco we regret to hear that the 'arbojo' is gaining great headway.

Mr. Archibald Craig, a Scotch estanciaero of that district, has labored most unceasingly to destroy the 'arbojo' on his estancia.

and has spent in wages of two pesos several hundred dollars; even to this day he keeps a regular gang of workmen for no other purpose than to cut down the 'arbojo'.

but owing to the studied neglect of his neighbors and some lazy negligent estanciaeros hard by, he finds all his efforts to keep his land clear of this nuisance futile.

4. Look to the inside of your dwelling, as well as outside, to get rid of Nuisances.

Are the walls and ceilings dirty or mouldy? at the cost of a shilling or two they may be lime-whited.

This has been found one of the most effectual preventives of Cholera. Avoid, if possible, crowding your sleeping-rooms.

If there is a Bedroom, keep it open and have no chimney board, or chest of drawers, to stop it up.

It would be good to make a hole, three or four inches square, near the ceiling, into the chimney—a very easy ventilator.

Get pure air into your rooms by every possible means, and get rid of the foul air in the most effectual manner.

If there is a constant offensive smell within your dwelling, which other people as well as yourself notice be sure that there is danger at hand.

and never rest till you have ascertained the cause, and have got it removed, as far as possible.

Complain to the landlord, if he neglects you, complain to those who have to enforce 'The Nuisances Removal Act.'

If you cannot get the Nuisance removed, you ought to prepare to remove from the Nuisance.

If you go to other Lodgings or Houses, go to those where there has been no fever.

There are houses, with no fault of construction, that are always disagreeable to the senses.

They are the abodes of sluttishness—the forerunner of disease. The person is seldom clean, when a dwelling is dirty.

Personal cleanliness and house cleanliness are both health-givers, and are of vital importance when the elements of disease and death are around us.

5. This Advice, with regard to your dwelling, assumes that you live in a populous town; but the principles on which the Advice is founded hold good, whether you dwell in a Village, or even in a lone Cottage.

All places, it is to be feared, have their Nuisances: If there is a dung-heap at your threshold, remove it to a distance.

If a foul ditch, or cesspool, stir yourself to have a change. If the pigsty is offensive, cleanse and wash it daily.

Have no poultry, or rabbits, within doors. In a word, get dirt and damp away from your house, and out of your house, and get pure air into it.

Be clean yourself, and have everything clean about you.

6. Having looked to your dwelling within and without, consider what is best for your welfare as to Food and Clothing.

brandy and water, and repeated every three or four hours, or oftener if the attack is severe.

Half the quantity to persons under fifteen—smaller doses to children.

9. If the disease assume a violent form before help can be obtained, put the sufferer into a warm bed, apply bottles of hot water or heated flannel to the stomach and feet along the spine.

A dessert spoonful of brandy may be given from time to time in hot water.

Constant friction with flannel dipped in hot vinegar is recommended; as well as the application of a vinegar and mustard poultice over the belly.

A prudent person will have the necessary articles at hand.

But promptitude in getting assistance is the first duty. By night or by day send for the Doctor; and such is the zeal of the medical profession that the humblest person will not send in vain.

10. If any of the evil habits and neglects, referred to in this Advice, exist in yourself or your family, begin to alter such habits and avoid such neglects, without delay.

The desired change to enable you to meet this Epidemic Disease is good for every other; and an immediate preparation may save a vast amount of misery.

The condition of the human body cannot be altered at once; but the practices which tend to an evil condition may be instantly changed.
