The following is a verbal account from one of the passengers of the illfated vessel. I wrote it down as it was told me, suppressing a few renatural should find vent, seeing that they lost their little all:-"The Royal Standard left London staunch crew of thirteen men and twenty passengers—several of whom had been to England purchasing goods, and were now on their return; others, fresh from the country, where they had been used to hard work and little pay all their lives, were now gazing forward and hoping for a better pose has asked for the delivery of the and happier life in a more favored clime. After the first month out they "The colonists have no confidence in began to experience very heavy weather; still the ship was carrying full sail, while other vessels which they passed were under reefed top-sails. On September 30, the vessel was struck by a squall, which carried away her bowsprit, foremast and mainmast: the vessel then began to roll so much dressed to their respective Ministers or | that everyone thought she must turn over; however, they had no remedy, but to stand by the ship, as, when the masts went overboard, they carried five, out of six, boats along with them. Everyone then set to work to rig jurymasts, after effecting which they steered for Rio de Janeiro. On the 10th of October at a-quarter past five in the morning the vessel struck heavily on the bank of S. Thome, and the heavy surf immediately overs lantly saved some of the crew and passengers, so I will follow the narrative of my informant, who was one of the

About ten o'clock on the morning we struck, sixteen passengers, being all the women and children on board, the doctor, first mate, Mr. Lawrence, and six sailors, got into a boat and made for the shore; the surf, however, was so heavy that we could not effect a landing, so we again put out to sea. near enough to shore to observe if there was any landing place, which we did not succeed in finding after twenty four hours's search. When we mustered we found we were eight short, all of them vasions of seditious parties and of the women and, children; we then commenced walking along the beach to look for some house or habitation, but we soon gave it up, as we were all so worn out; so we went to lie under the brushwood, while the mate ordered the five sailors to keep on and try to find either house or provisions. While resting in this way we all distinctly beard the crowing of a cock, and ima mediately arose and followed the sound, which finally brought us to a hut, where there was an old negro, a boy, a half starved looking dog, and the said cock with a hen. The old man. brought us a small cheese, which we soon devoured; the Doctor then made signs to him to kill the hen, which he did and stewed for us, and while we were eating it he went and gathered some wild fruit for us. At night he spread some mats on the floor of the next spare room in the hut. As soon as we were altogether in the room the liberty by the revolutionists, most of Doctor read the CVII Psalm, we then returned thanks for our deliverance, and lay down to rest. Next morning the old negro had nothing to give me but a little crushed meal (farinha) About 10 he mounted a lank pony and beckoned us to follow him; after an bour or so walking on the hot sand some of the ladies began to get faint; so they rode alternately on the pony, The whole country seemed to be nothed ing but swamps; luckily for us how. ever there were plenty of pools of fresh water, which we drank copionsly. At sundown we arrived at an hotel; here we had a good supper, after which our thoughts turned to a good bed; we were not destined however to any such luck, after we were informed by signs that a canoe was awaiting us in the canal, so without any more ado down we went. The ladies complained at of all social order, I shall be obliged to not being allowed to rest, but they consider your Excellency as assuming had to keep on, although they were nearly worn out. In a few hours (about 2 in the morning) we arrived at a large store, and the news spreading, the place was soon filled with a large number of people, among them several Americans, who treated us very kindly Here we all went into a large room and after receiving refreshment, in down on mats. We learn that hostilities have taken place between the Freuch garrison of Senegal and the natives, in which the former lost 150 and the latter 800 men. The natives had come in overpowering numbers to annihilate the French and must have done so were it not for the Chassepot rifle, which did fearful execution among them in an incredibly short time. The French allowed their assailants to come very near, and then opened on them with this new needle-gun, which had already done such wonders when first used against the Garibaldians at Mentana. We hear that our old friend Mr. J C. Simpson has made improvemente on the Chassepot needle-gun, and is in hopes of getting his gun adopted by some continental Governments, under the name of the Carter-Henry rifle.
