The so called soldiers who committed such excesses under Denis no longer exist at the Sauce, the only inhabitants now being the pure Indians who are not at all so bad as the Guacho soldiers, and it is stated the indians are also to be moved away to Nanducito, 40 leagues farther north. THE FALKLAND ISLANDS. (Continued.)

I have been considerably struck by the fact, that the Colonial Government does not grant to anybody a right Falklands and proceed to the main of property in land.

The Falkland Company has its establishments both in East Falkland and in West Falkland, and for the pursuit after pengains they also occupy many of the rocky and barren smaller islands that surround the two big ones and yet the Company holds no property of its own! Might not this be considered as a tacit acknowledgment of the total absence of any right to the that the men are armed with a long possession of these islands? Perhaps three edged pike fixed at the end of the English Government foresees that the time is not far when they may be obliged to restore said islands to the Argentines, their legitimate owners, since they were an integral part of the Viceroyalty when Independence was declared.

Notwithstanding the small number of inhabitants, there are two commercial houses in the town doing a large basiness-the Falkland Company and the firm of Mr George Dean.

The large capital invested by these houses in naval stores and provisions of all sorts is not with the only object of supplying the town. I have already alladed to the advantageous geographical position of the islands. It is due to it that Stanley is the best and nearest port of refuge for vessels on their way to and from the Pacific, where without going much out of their way, they find all the elements for repairs, fresh provisious, and abundance of excellent fresh water.

During my short stay I have seen 10 or 12 large ships put into Stanley with considerable damage, and after a few days delay they were able to put to sea again.

Another branch of commerce of the houses alluded to is the exportation of produce, among which the principal articles are penguin's oil and sea lion to light a fire, but the hides, unlike to describe.

During the whole of August and beginning of September large and countless flocks of penguius come from all directions to the Falklands, and where they alight the ground is literally covered with them. This periodical migration is for purposes of reproduction. The people who make a business of killing these animals for their oil proceed about this time in schooners capable of weathering the storms that are so common at this sea son. Besides a small crew these schooners have on board a capataz with a gaug of from 12 to 15 men. Their only arm is a short stick.

In the island to which they repair, they find a rough kind of small fur nace that has been used the previous year, and which serves to heat one houses of business of Stanley, the or more iron boilers, each of which is capable of holding as much as 250 gal. lons of oil. These islands are leased from the Colonial Government for five years, at small rent, and every exporting living has several rookeries, which are respected by the rest.

The Penguin hunters are generally at their post before the arrival of their intended victims, and when these arrive and drop on the ground by millions, the men go among them and with their sticks commit havoc upon these tired birds, heaped together, want of competition. These contracts, whose wings are intended more as sanctioned by custom, are enforced as helps to swim than to fly. Each man tallow, and ox-hides. The West Falk. immediately piles up a certain number land, which is larger than East Falk-

The fat of eleven birds gives about one gallon of oil, and it is calculated that a gang of fourteen men with a capataz, returns after a month and a pany alone possesses from twelve to half campaign with a quantity of oil, lifteen, all of them well stocked, and varying from twenty five to thirty the more secluded portions of the thousand gallons.

From St. George's Bay to Tierra del Fuego, they coast the Patagonian shore, and choring at some of its many fine inlets marle to the south of the Falklands, where experience has taught them they will meet with the enemy they thus able to see all the eastern and a search.

Here they wage a more serious struggle as they have no longer to deal with poor defenceles birds. It is true pole of hard wood, but very often with one bite of its formidable teeth a sea lion will break one of these spears with the same facility as one would a tooth-

On reaching a spot frequented by these amphibious animals the boat is anchored, and the crew land with as little noise as possible to await the time when their intended victims go ashore to bask in the sun which at rare moments shines forth, and to eat | Peru's mishap, is also an excellent the tender grain that grows in the hollows along the coast. After stopping a few days in Stanley to collect some information relative to my commission, and to get myself recognised as the agent of the Italian Marine Mutual Assurance Company, I freighted a vessel of which I took command to proceed to Port Albers scene of the 'Peru's' mishap. I was part of the southern coast, and I came across some magnificent ports. Among them undoubtedly Port Edgar and Port Stephens stand in the first line.

Port Edgar is an immense harbour almost land 'ceked, with high ground, one hundred and fifty yards. It is lishments. seven or eight miles long by three in its widest part. The anchorage is incomparably good, the bottom being sandy, with from 18 to 120 feet of water. There are no rocks to obstract the manœuvres of a vessel, and a few pieces of artillery at its mouth would keep at bay the most formidable navy of the world.

Port Albermarle, the scene of the port, and situated at the extreme south stormy weather to put in for repairs. It was under pretence of being under such condition that the Captain of the wrecked vessel above alluded to purposely struck upon some rocks lying within the port, which in the chart I have had to make I have chrissubsequently found correct and approved by the Colonial Tribunal, the pointed by the Tribunal. A copy has been sent to the British Admiralty for

I have suffered from cold to a degree beyond description, I shall never forget the seven or eight days sufferings I had to undergo; the most biting cold weather in Buenos Ayres, cannot even serve as a point of comparison; it is something that paralyzes one, and against which no amount of clothing or covering is of any use and at times the feeling was akin to that af scalding or burning.

MMIGRANTS' HOUSE The Sisters of Mercy desire to express their gratitude to the generous abscribers towards their "Immigrant House," No. 248 Calle Chacabuce. The amount already collected will enable them to commence the building they propose, but it will not suffice to finish it.

The facility such establishments afford, both at home and abroad, for obtaining persons of respectable character, and likewise efficient for demestic service, sufficiently recommends them, to the public, without at all taking into consideration, the amount of misery it precludes. The Sisters therefore confidently hope that, a call from them for furthes assistance will not be in roin them for furthes assistance will not be in vain. They also take advantage of this opportue nity to remark they invariably give a note to any one that they recommend to a situation, and that all subscription, not entered by the doier, in the collecting book, kept in the Convent, will be published in the 'Standard' every month.
