Your issue of to-day contains an elaborately compiled letter addressed to me. As the letter appeared, it gave no evidence that it had not reached my hands in the usual manuscript form; so I beg to inform your readers that, on this occasion, I received my correspondence through the columns of THE STANDARD.

Your correspondent has fallen into an error when he asserts that the question of the late Canon Fahy's obsequies had been left untouched up to the date of his writing. The readers of your paper who are interested in the subject will remember that in March last a public notice was given that the funeral service would be postponed until healthier times.

It is but a few days since the impediment to their taking place in church, could be said to have finally died out, and in order that the information should have a chance of general circulation in the camp, I allowed three weeks for this purpose. Your correspondent may rest assured that anxious as he is to see Father Fahy's name venerated, and the gratitude of the people publicly and generously manifested towards him who has placed them under any obligation, he is not one whit more anxious on the subject than is your Faithful servant,
