in harmony with time and place. The finest one of all was that of the graveyard, when the dead body of Ophelia was ushered in to the music of a dead march, which was executed with considerable pathos; the effect altogether was extremely fine. We hope to see the play represented once more, and also to see present as many of the English people as are capable of, understanding this tragedy and of appreciating such superb acting.

Yesterday witnessed another splen did editorial victory for the STANDARD it being the only paper in the city that published in full the inauguration of the Cordoba Observatory, with Professor Gould's remarkable address on the occasion. The discourse is one of the finest compositions ever den-vered before an Argentine, or in fact vered before an Argentine, or in fact vered before an Argentine, or in fact conditions imposed by either party are the field have only succeeded in showbeing translated over the wires to all the papers in town. It contained 5200 words, and could have been published by any of our city colleagues on Wednesday had they thought proper to telegraph for it. In connection with this editorial victory we may mention that there are no less than two lines of telegraph between this city and Cordoba, and both with a very able staff of telegraphists. the victory. We commend to our readers a very able critique on Rossi's 'Hamlet,' from the pen of Professor Lewis. Nearly all the native papers have pubhabed critiques on this play. The terms are most liberal, and by no means onerous on householders. It is rumoured, however, that there is a hitch somewhere, and that the authorities are trying to compel the tramway companies to 'adoquinar' at their own expense every street through which their lines run, which appears to us to be simply impossible; as for such an outlay the companies would require to increase their capital.

We hear something of a duel that was to have come off on Thursday, in the woods at Palermo, between two foreigners, with rapiers. On reaching the ground, however, a Bob Acres kind of sensation overcame both parties, and by mutual consent the spitting tools were abandoned and fisticuffs resorted to, the result being claret ad libitum 'aud considerable discolouration about the eyes of both parties.
