Having now fairly and impartially reviewed the present crisis affecting the Hospital, and having demonstrated that, notwithstanding the strong resemblance which exists between the "Suggestions of the Specialists" and the "Revised Rules" of the anti-Specialists, these two parties are in the same predicament as the knights of the Shield who nearly strangled each other about a difficulty which they could not solve, it is to be regretted that if the advice of the "Coom Posh" be taken, they would recommend, as a definite solution, both schemes to be blended into one—a new one that would embody the liberal principles of both, and be based on the Christian virtues of moderation, brotherly love, and mutual forbearance.
