WRECK OF THE HARRIET IRVING. May 20th 1872.

I presume you will very soon be troubled with news from this locality that the wreck of the Harriet Irving, which was removed as it was in the busy centres of life and activity...

We have before us an admirable pamphlet by Mr. Oldendorf on the Importance of Agriculture. He begins by quoting Cicero who said 'agriculture was the most useful and worthy pursuit of a free man.'

Mr. Oldendorf traces a close relation between the advanced condition of Germany and the national taste for agriculture, more than two-thirds of the population being tillers of the soil.

He next directs our attention to Japan, which is nothing less than a vast garden, supporting three times as many people as England to the square mile.

Chile is the cradle of agriculture in South America, and so vast is the development of this interest there, that the Banco Agricola has just advanced to one wheat-farmer the sum of £200,000 sterling.

If we expect some day, says Mr. Oldendorf, to pay for all the new loans coming into the country the best way will be in wheat, and for this end the Government should spare no effort.

You talk of want of hands, yet remember that in the epidemic of 1871 it was found impossible to place 1,000 immigrants throughout the 70 Partidos of this province.

Mr. Oldendorf's opinion if things were properly arranged we could absorb 1,000 immigrants daily, and soon follow in the track of the U. States.
