European ship-owners are soured against Buenos Ayres, and as for ship captains, they so detest the outer roads that they will load in the docks of Liverpool at a less freight for the port of Valparaiso than for the port of Buenos Ayres.

This shipping question is one of immense interest to our commercial public, and we are indebted to our good friend Mr. Wheelwright, who has ever the progress of these countries at heart, for the following highly important correspondence.

To William Wheelwright, Esq., Buenos Ayres. Liverpool, July 31st 1872. Dear Sirs, Taking advantage of our former acquaintance...

Dear Sirs, I am in receipt of your letter of July 31st, which reminds me of our former acquaintance, and I am very happy to have it in my power to give you the information you desire, so far as I am enabled to do so.

Dear Sirs, The Emperor assisted yesterday at the Pedro Segundo college examination, in which an Anglo-Brazilian boy named Edward Silvo O'Kelly was among the most successful competitors.

The inner harbor of Ensenada is a perfect dock, formed by Nature, and will admit of ships, when the bar is deepened, of a size adapted to the trade of Buenos Ayres.

By dredging the channel for a length of three quarters of a mile, the depth can be increased by six feet.

While the terrible gales which are so destructive to shipping in the outer and inner Roads of B. Ayres prevail, the port and outer harbour of Ensenada are perfectly protected, and free from all danger, being covered from the S. E., the only really dangerous wind in the River, by the point and bank of Santiago.

The steamer which I describe will be available for the docks when they are built, as well as for Ensenada; they must be provided with powerful engines of Randolph and Elder's double cylinders, and will make their voyages out and back within 25 days each way.

The ordinary expense of landing goods in Buenos Ayres, and placing them alongside deposit stores, is at present four patacones, or about 10s. sterling per ton, whereas the railway proposes to take goods from Buenos Ayres, and place them in ships' trucks, at 8s. sterling per ton, and it is not unlikely that this will be eventually reduced to one dollar per ton.

The Provincial Chambers at Nittherohy voted yesterday a sum of one million sterling to bring out 100,000 immigrants from Germany and England.

ing, under such circumstances, that he should be anxious, on the faith of M. Canard, to take French leave of Versailles. He can console himself for the delays by remembering that the Communists' 'crack' gambler—F. knew well—Loriot, having seen him at work at Porte Maillot—was six months lying under sentence of death.

The soldiers have made no demonstration for the Napoleons or anybody else; they are preparing to go into winter-quarters, and firing sumptuously on their increased wage of six sous per day.
