estimate in April 1871, and the whole cost of a complete dredging fleet, as recommended by Mr. Revey, would be at least four times the amount of the estimate formed by him in February 1871.

Not profiting by experience, nor paying attention to the information conveyed to Mr. Agote in 1871, and with which he was well acquainted, he ventures upon an estimate of $22,000 for two dredgers of the Emilio Castro class, a number of small barges, and a small tug steamer.

I have not the means of analyzing this, but I am convinced that the complete equipment for performing the work at the time he calculates will cost a much larger sum than he has estimated.

I find in the River Clyde that, where mud punts or barges are employed for carrying away the excavated material, it requires about 10 in number for every 7000 cubic yards excavated per day.

Mr. Revey proposes to excavate 1,788,200 cubic yards, or 894,100 cubic yards per annum. At the same rate as on the Clyde, the amount of dredging would involve the use of a fleet of 1275 mud punts or barges, which cost on the Clyde, according to estimates made in the Spring of 1871, £100 each, representing about an outlay of £127,500 in this country.

The dredged material from the main entrance channel amounts for some millions of cubic yards, would either have to be placed on specially purchased ground, or it must be thrown out into the River at some point consistently removed from the site from which dredged; this would be an expensive operation, and one also attended by considerable danger to the navigation of the River.

The lights must be much more crowded together than at present or they must go up the river. The ship building will be greatly impeded or destroyed.

It is already crowded with lights, especially the 'Coch' portion of it; and its banks are now well occupied either as wharves or ship-builders' yards.

At least twenty-five acres of most valuable land would be sacrificed before it could be made available for the purposes intended.

Yves's canal enters at one end only. Extensive approaches to swing bridges would have to be placed at intervals in order that the right bank of the river might be made available.

The mass of excavated material to be removed for the purpose of widening the river would be immense. A very large portion of the mud to be dredged from the present channel would be of a highly offensive character.

The ground chosen for docks, and also for the future extensions, is of a good, solid nature, fit for the foundations of any wharf that may be put upon it.

Existing warehouses and places of business may remain as they now are; but should there be a desire to have places of business or warehouses nearer to the docks, there is ample space, good foundations, and good access at all times.

No immediate change need be made in the situation of the Custom House Store, which may be gradually improved, or rebuilt in more convenient portions from time to time.

The dredged material from the main entrance channel, which would be coming for both schemes, could be profitably used in raising the ground reclaimed.

The ship building and repairing interests will not only be undisturbed, but will be greatly improved.

It is a great pity that the main channel would be of the same depth and capacity in each direction. (i.e.) not 13 feet only, as adopted by Mr. Revey for the Riachuelo; but 20 feet, as adopted by me for the main channel in the River Plate.

In the foregoing remarks, Mr. Moore has evidently contrasted the advantages and disadvantages of the two proposed sites for harbours on the assumption that the main channel would be of the same depth and capacity in each direction.

Nothing particular yesterday morning, except the heat. No steamer from Montevideo, and consequently no arrivals from our office there.

My own estimate for dredging and all other work is made with a full knowledge of their value and of the difference in the price of material and labour, though for obvious reasons, where works have to be contracted for, I forbear to give the particulars.

I have quoted from my Report to His Excellency Sr. Don P. Agote of the 8th April 1871, on 'the Purification of the Riachuelo.' I see by Dr. Lopez's observations that this Report has been printed, and is now therefore public property.

The dredging of the Riachuelo as fraught with danger to the health of the city, unless such preventive disinfecting measures as are jointly recommended by Dr. Franklin and myself are adopted, and that the dredging, if attempted at all, should only be carried on in the coldest season of the year.

Mr. Revey gives no information as to where this material for use is to be deposited. It would be very expensive and highly dangerous to place them on dry land, and it will hardly be proposed to drop them within the area of the River Plate within any reasonable distance of Buenos Ayres.

I will conclude by quoting from a report addressed to His Excellency Sr. Don Luis L. Dominguez, dated Buenos Ayres, August 3rd, 1872, and written by my representative there, Mr. Alfred Moore.

I have not the means of analyzing this, but I am convinced that the complete equipment for performing the work at the time he calculates will cost a much larger sum than he has estimated.
