Only yesterday, at two o'clock p.m., as we were coming out of Mr. Bateman's Office, in Calle Corrientes, corner of Reconquista, a scuffle took place between two young men.

One, an employee of the Police, had tracked his opponent from the Parque. Why he did not lay on to him sooner, or having so resolved, why he did not call a few policemen to his aid is not clear.

At the corner of San Martin the detective laid on to his prey. The youth (who could not count more than 19 winters) feeling himself collared from behind struggled hard to get free.

Seeing him grasp a revolver we rushed forward to hold the arm aloft. Just at this moment the detective, perhaps from exhaustion, let him go.

Before we could collar him he had swung round, twisting like an eel from our grasp and firing at random on the crowd rapidly gathering round.

Dashing through them at a bound he made up San Martin as far as Calle Parque. Mr. Martin, the English printer, vainly tried to trip up the run away.
